Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?

Graduates from this program work as writers, editors, teachers, public relations personnel, librarians, business persons, and copywriters.

Additional Education Required?

Graduates from this program who wish to teach at the college level attend M.A. and Ph.D. programs in English graduate schools. Law schools, medical schools, and library schools also look favorably upon English majors. For those interested in elementary and secondary teaching in California, a fifth year is required for a full credential. The fifth year may or may not be at the graduate level.

Public Sector vs. Denominational

Most denominational employment opportunities are within teaching, although other positions are available as well.

Job Outlook

High school and second-language teaching opportunities are plentiful. Job opportunities in public relations, technical writing, and editing are available but more competitive. Combining English with other majors is also a good way to gain a competitive advantage in other fields.
