Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?

With further education at the graduate level, graduates are prepared for ministry in a church setting or for specialized ministries such as hospital, prison, or military chaplaincy, youth ministry, church administration, college or graduate school religion teaching. The student with a theology major who also completes the Teacher Credentialing Program qualifies for teaching Bible at the elementary or secondary level.

Additional Education Required?

For service in pastoral ministry, an additional year is normally required as an intern in a local church, followed by completion of the Master of Divinity program at Andrews University (two years). Upon successful completion of supervised pastoral work, a person is recommended for ordination/commissioning. The graduate can normally consider this recognition by the laying on of hands to occur six years after college graduation. Positions in pastoral ministry are offered by local conferences and positions in secondary teaching by conference education departments.

Job Outlook

Employment is expected to be good for graduates showing both good academic ability and strong commitment to ministry.

Teaching Credential

Students planning to obtain a Seventh-day Adventist teaching credential in religion should consult with the credential analyst in the Education Department and should become acquainted with the specific requirements for admission to and successful completion of the Elementary or Secondary Teaching Credential Program as outlined on pages EDUC-04 and EDUC-06.
