Student Learning Outcomes

At the completion of this degree program, students will:

- Identify events, influences, and patterns in the development of civilizations and movements, and their interactions over time.
- Assess the past from multiple perspectives, and compare the experiences of various actors in history.
- Evaluate both past and present institutions and actions in the light of Christian moral teachings, while respecting the cultural values of other times and places.
- Think critically, using the tools of historians, and communicate with integrity and effectiveness within the discipline of history.

Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?

The history major offers an excellent background for law, medicine, and dentistry, as well as government service. It is a relatively unstructured major and therefore permits unusual flexibility of career choice while the student is actually taking courses. There is room, particularly if one begins by the sophomore year, to work in the specific requirements of almost all pre-professional curricula. Students have access to the Utt Memorial Library in the department’s seminar room and the adjacent Honor’s Program Common Room. Faculty-student suppers and discussion groups complete the collegial and friendly atmosphere, the hallmark of the department. Prospective teachers should take a Social Studies major and consult with department teachers about non-departmental courses. Following completion of the Social Studies major, each student seeking a California teaching certificate must take the California Subject Examination of Teachers (CSET).

Additional Education Required?

A BA in History allows you one of two paths. Many people take History as a pre-professional degree leading to graduate work in medicine or law. Others chose to move on to graduate work in numerous fields including History, Political Science, International Affairs or virtually any field in the Humanities. While some use History as a means to enter secondary teaching, the Social Studies major is designed to meet certification requirements more easily.

Public Sector vs. Denominational

A degree in History will find opportunities in both the Public Sector and in Denominational service.

Job Outlook

For those using a History major as a pre-professional degree the job outlook is dependent on the field in which you decide to focus on in graduate school.
