Language & Culture at PUC

The Department of World Languages and Cultures focus on languages and cultures as well as study abroad experiences equips students to become active participants in the global community.

As the United States is increasingly interconnected with other countries through commerce and global agreements, it simultaneously becomes more diverse within its own borders. For these reasons, it’s increasingly important for career-bound graduates to know at least one language other than English. The department fosters cultural learning along with the grammar and vocabulary of each language.

Students broaden their communication skills in ways that are in even more demand in an interdependent, multicultural world. The department’s goal is to provide effective opportunities for the development of both linguistic and cultural proficiency. Students learn to speak the language, appreciate the culture, and understand the native speaker’s perspective. In the process, they become “cultural brokers”–facilitators of comprehension across cultures as they serve in a broad range of professional fields.
