Teaching Credential

Students desiring to enter a program of studies leading to a California teaching credential in social science should take the B.S. degree in Social Studies. Students will need to pass the social science portion of the CSET exam one quarter prior to doing full-time student teaching. Students are invited to discuss the program with their major advisor in the History Department.

Those who plan to teach on the secondary level should consult with the credential analyst in the Education Department and should become acquainted with the specific requirements for admission to and successful completion of the Secondary Teaching Credential as outlined on page EDUC-06.

Student Learning Outcomes

Students can:

- Effectively synthesize, evaluate and present historical arguments.
- Demonstrate familiarity with both the academic and professional nature of the discipline.
- Be conversant with the historical trajectory of the major events associated with American, European, and world History.

Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?

The social studies major has been most often earned by those interested in elementary or secondary teaching. It is diversified enough to provide a student an acquaintance with a minimum of four areas in the social sciences, and is a broad introduction to the liberal arts. Besides the most obvious group who take this major, it serves very well for pre-professionals who wish contact with the social sciences and still have enough room in their programs to complete their specific requirements for medicine, dentistry or law.

Additional Education Required?

The Social Studies major is designed to prepare students for teaching at the secondary level. The only additional training required are those steps necessary to achieve denominational and state credentials.

Public Sector vs. Denominational

A Social Studies degree will prepare you to take the CSET exam for California state credentialing making your degrees useful in both the Public Sector and in Denominational service.

Job Outlook

Positions open to those with the B.S. in Social Studies and without additional graduate work would be primarily in elementary or secondary teaching. Qualified candidates with a Social Studies major are placed at a very high rate coming from PUC's program. Others would be preparing simultaneously for a specific postgraduate training.
