Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?

This major is designed primarily for those who wish to obtain a broad background in the study of religion but who are planning careers in a health related field, such as medicine, dentistry, or pharmacy. In addition to providing a broad-based undergraduate education, the religion major is intended to assist in the preparation of lay persons who can participate more fully in the life of the church.

Additional Education Required?

It is strongly recommended that those electing to graduate with this major combine it with a health related professional program (such as, pre-medicine, pre-dentistry, pre-pharmacy, etc.). Prospective teachers must obtain teaching credentials.

Job Outlook

There are limited opportunities for those who graduate solely as religion majors. But if one combines the religion major with either a pre-professional program as suggested above or another major, or continues into graduate school, one can greatly enhance one's future job prospects.
