Student Learning Outcomes

- Students can:
- Understand the scope of the history of British and American literature.
 - Read, interpret and analyze literary texts, using a variety of critical approaches.
 - Write analytical essays that include a significant literary argument, well-organized supporting evidence and a clear critical voice.
 - Effectively locate, select and integrate scholarly sources in writing essays, properly using the MLA rules of citation.
 - Demonstrate knowledge of linguistics and sociolinguistic development of language.
 - Appreciate the diversity of voices within and beyond the literary canon.
 - Develop moral and ethical values as a result of the issues encountered in literary texts; practice the highest ethical and professional standards in their treatment of the ideas of fellow students and scholars.
- In addition to the core competencies, English majors with an emphasis in Education can:*
- Develop effective strategies for teaching writing based on an understanding of Composition Theory.
 - Understand the grammar and structure of the English language for use in teaching writing at the secondary level.
 - Demonstrate major field competency in areas of literature of special interest for teaching High School (Adolescent Lit, Multi-cultural Lit, Shakespeare).
 - Demonstrate adequate preparation to be able to teach or supervise journalism and drama at the secondary level.
 - Pursue careers that would allow the student to successfully teach writing and literature at the secondary level.

Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?
 Graduates from this program work as writers, editors, teachers, public relations personnel, librarians, business persons, and copywriters.

Additional Education Required?
 For those interested in elementary and secondary teaching in California, a fifth year is required for a full credential. The fifth year may or may not be at the graduate level.

Public Sector vs. Denominational
 Most denominational employment opportunities are within teaching, although other positions are available as well.

Job Outlook
 High school and second-language teaching opportunities are plentiful. Job opportunities in public relations, technical writing, and editing are available but more competitive. Combining English with other majors is also a good way to gain a competitive advantage in other fields.

 Whichever course was not completed for core requirement.
