Student Learning Outcomes

- Students can:
- Understand the scope of the history of British and American literature.
 - Read, interpret and analyze literary texts, using a variety of critical approaches.
 - Write analytical essays that include a significant literary argument, well-organized supporting evidence and a clear critical voice.
 - Effectively locate, select and integrate scholarly sources in writing essays, properly using the MLA rules of citation.
 - Demonstrate knowledge of linguistics and sociolinguistic development of language.
 - Appreciate the diversity of voices within and beyond the literary canon.
 - Develop moral and ethical values as a result of the issues encountered in literary texts; practice the highest ethical and professional standards in their treatment of the ideas of fellow students and scholars.
- In addition to the core competencies, English majors with an emphasis in Writing can:*
- Write skillfully in a variety of genres.
 - Demonstrate advanced skill in a particular genre.
 - Provide and accept constructive criticism.
 - Understand and value the creative process.
 - Pursue careers or graduate work in writing-related fields such as creative writing, technical writing, publishing or journalism.

Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?
 Graduates from this program work as writers, editors, teachers, public relations personnel, librarians, business persons, and copywriters.

Additional Education Required?
 Graduates from this program who wish to teach at the college level attend M.A. and Ph.D. programs in English graduate schools. Law schools, medical schools, and library schools also look favorably upon English majors. For those interested in elementary and secondary teaching in California, a fifth year is required for a full credential. The fifth year may or may not be at the graduate level.

Public Sector vs. Denominational
 Most denominational employment opportunities are within teaching, although other positions are available as well.

Job Outlook
 High school and second-language teaching opportunities are plentiful. Job opportunities in public relations, technical writing, and editing are available but more competitive. Combining English with other majors is also a good way to gain a competitive advantage in other fields.

* The "Colloquium" must be taken eight times throughout the student's enrollment at PUC for a total of 1.6 units.
  Most writing internships require JOUR 141 as a prerequisite.
  Only one course from ENGL 211, 311, and 411 may be applied.
