Student Learning Outcomes

Students can:

- Demonstrate foundational knowledge in the functional areas of business.
- Evaluate the legal, social, and economic environments of business domestically and globally.
- Assess information and situations to make rational ethical business decisions.
- Demonstrate effective oral and written communication skills.
- Leverage decision-support tools and research to integrate business knowledge in applied settings.

Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?

College graduates with an accounting emphasis may choose among several areas:

- 1) Within the broad areas of accounting, specialization is possible in taxation, auditing, governmental accounting, institutional accounting, public accounting, fraud examination and forensic accounting.
- 2) Graduate schools of business, law, medicine, or dentistry.
- 3) Self-employment.

A wide variety of opportunities are available to students with this emphasis. The ultimate position is dependent upon each individual. Generally the graduates that put forth the effort and desire for advancement obtain their CPA certificate and move into responsible leadership positions.

Additional Education Required?

A bachelor's degree is required for most accounting positions and is a prerequisite for the CPA examination. In most states the equivalent of two additional quarters of college credits are required before the CPA certificate will be granted. Further education (master's and/or doctorate) may enhance one's competitive position.

Job Outlook

The demand for accountants has exceeded the supply for a number of years and this trend is expected to continue. Companies value employees with accounting knowledge, making this degree very appealing. Accounting graduates typically find the job search process to be much easier than most other graduates.

* Courses used to fulfill requirements in these sections may not also fulfill requirements in another emphasis or business program.
