Student Learning Outcomes

Students can:

- Identify and interpret different concepts of “culture” and its identifying characteristics in specific contexts.
- Demonstrate knowledge and understanding of the Portuguese-speaking world.
- Identify and analyze current issues applying cultural and language knowledge.
- Demonstrate increased proficiency in the Portuguese language.
- Show familiarity with and application of language learning strategies that enhance Portuguese language retention and foster independent, life-long learning.

Occupational Information

What can I do with this major?

There are many sectors which need employees with a knowledge of Portuguese language and culture, including government agencies, international non-profits (NGOs) such as ADRA, other humanitarian agencies, business, journalism, and education.

Additional Education Required?

The range of employment for Language and Culture Studies majors is very broad. Some positions allow for learning on the job. Many other jobs require additional training, including areas such as interpretation, education, and healthcare.

Students are strongly encouraged to increase their options by combining Language and Culture Studies with a second major or a pre-professional program.

Job Outlook

As the world becomes a global village, linguistic and cultural proficiency is an increasingly valuable, even monetizable asset. In addition to these competencies, the knowledge gained encompasses a highly sought-after skill set: Flexibility in learning and thinking, an appreciation of diversity, awareness of global perspectives, and the ability to interact effectively with people of different backgrounds.

Study Abroad Expectations

The study abroad experience is a central part of this degree program and will greatly enhance a student’s knowledge of both language and culture. Typically, students should plan to spend three quarters studying abroad at the Adventist Colleges Abroad (ACA) campus in Brazil as part of the curriculum for this degree. With the permission of the department, a well-prepared student may be able to complete the language coursework during fewer quarters abroad. Study abroad is recommended but not required for students who qualify for the Advanced Proficiency option. Students should consult with a departmental advisor for additional information regarding recommendations and options.

Information regarding the ACA program can be obtained at the departmental office or online at www.acastudyabroad.com.
